“Given the ongoing concerns about state funding for higher education, the role private donors play is more critical than ever. Through the incredible generosity of our donors, we are able to serve our state, region, and the world through our first-rate research and education. Your gifts make a profound difference. Thank you.”

– Tony Frank, president, Colorado State University

“From a $5 pledge to help a flood victim through CSU Cares, to a multimillion-dollar gift to help build a new biomedical engineering building, every donation to Colorado State promotes opportunity for excellence. Our donors are second to none. Thank you for being part of our CSU donor community.”

– Brett Anderson, vice president for University Advancement
Thank you to all 33,614 donors who helped us make Fiscal Year 2013 a record-breaking year. You gave more than $112.4 million in cash, pledges, planned gifts, and gifts-in-kind to support CSU students, programs, and facilities.
Alumni Donors

Gifts from CSU alumni increased by 15 percent this year, and have increased by more than 45 percent in the past five years.

IMPACT NUMBERS

- CSU students awarded institutional scholarships and grants. This includes financial aid from endowed scholarships and annual gifts to CSU. Awards totaled $27,203,648.
- Alumni Donors
- CSU Marching Band members who made the trip to Dublin, Ireland, to march in the 2013 St. Patrick’s Festival parade. The trip was made possible by the backing of hundreds of generous donors, including a lead gift from long-time band supporter, Jackie Erickson.
- Square feet of interdisciplinary teaching, laboratory, and research space in the new Suzanne and Walter Scott, Jr. Grooming and Building. The building was made possible by generous gifts from the Suzanne and Walter Scott Foundation and numerous other donors.
- Donors have continued to make an impact with the Oval Preservation Endowment, created in 2011. The endowment supports preservation efforts, such as structural pruning and careful monitoring, for the beautiful 130-year-old American elms that are part of Colorado State University’s iconic Oval.
- Legacy Scholarships funded by private support and awarded to CSU student-athletes.

In the tradition of all those geologists who answered my simple questions out on the rig, the professors at CSU who diligently attempted to teach me a few hundred years of ever-evolving geological knowledge, and the working industry professionals who have shared their years of experience with me and helped me to succeed in my career; I am pleased to create and fund the Ware Geosciences Fellowship to offer a helping hand to those who are working on their geological path at CSU. I hope the worthy recipients can go on to experience professional success as I have, and find similar ways to pass along their good fortune as well.

– Jeff Ware, ’88, Warner College of Natural Resources

“As a single parent, my dad taught me that hard work pays off. I worked two jobs in high school and took classes at a community college, so I could afford college. My scholarship helps relieve the burdens of paying for school and allows me to focus on my studies.”

– Jesse Mader, ’15, recipient of the Eleanor Westfall Holmes Scholarship in the College of Natural Sciences

“Beyond the financial support, the example that these donors have set for me to be a person who helps and sacrifices his time for the good of the community is motivating. It gives me a model to follow and a great beacon to look to when I begin my professional career.”

– Jason Frink, ’13, scholarship recipient, in the College of Business
